Flames Reading Club

Headed by the Liberty University men's basketball program, the Flames Reading Club enters a new year in 2006-07.

The Flames Reading Club annually consists of Liberty student-athletes and members of the general student body who serve as reading mentors called "Reading Buddies" for children in the Lynchburg City School system. "This gives Liberty students and student-athletes the opportunity to serve in the community and make a difference," said men's basketball head coach Randy Dunton.

Nine Lynchburg City elementary schools currently participate in the program, including: William Marvin Bass, Heritage, Sandusky, Sheffield, Paul Munro, Robert S. Payne, Bedford Hills, Linkhorne and Perrymont.

University students work with Title 1 eligible students, which consist of students in grades 2-5, who benefit from having a Reading Buddy. Liberty University students visit to the elementary school once a week during a designated time and help the students improve their reading skills.

Liberty University students attend an orientation meeting with the City Schools Instructional Reading Specialist, as well as Title 1 teachers and principals, to prepare for their service as Reading Buddies.

Also, the students of the Lynchburg City School start each year's reading club in the Vines Center as members of the Liberty University administration and athletic department, including Executive Vice President Dr. Ron Godwin and head basketball coach Randy Dunton, kick off each year's campaign with a motivational speech.

The Flames Reading Club is currently in its fourth year, with the program receiving rave reviews and feedback during its first three years.
